SUBJECT: MILLENNIUM CHALLENGE CORPORATION INITIAL VISIT TO LESOTHO

11. SUMMARY: The Millennium Challenge Corporation team of Clay Lowery, Tom Briggs and Wesley Wilson paid a very successful initial visit to Lesotho May 26-28. Over the course of two and a half days, they met with the Prime Minister, nearly the entire Cabinet, almost all of the Principal Secretaries, representatives of international donors and the business, NGO and academic communities, and took a brief tour of the industrial areas around Maseru along with a bit of rural Lesotho. The team concluded with a press conference for the local media. Perhaps half of their interlocutors fully understood the radical departure from traditional foreign aid that the MCA represents. Minister of Finance Tim Thahane, the GOL contact point for the MCA, expects to have Lesotho's proposal to the MCC by late August or early September. END SUMMARY.

12. The Government of Lesotho enthusiastically welcomed the MCC team to the Mountain Kingdom. Several of the key ministers, including Finance Minister Thahane and Foreign Minister Tsekoa, adjusted their travel schedules to return early from overseas to meet with the team. The format of the meetings was essentially the same: the team briefly introduced the history and concept of the MCC (including the key fact that funding is not/not guaranteed), followed by questions and answers. It was clear from the tenor of the comments and questions that about half of the interlocutors understood immediately how the MCC differed from other foreign aid programs. Indeed, the most difficult concept for most to grasp was that the U.S. was not interested in dictating how the program would be run within Lesotho. For many, used to donors telling them what they needed and how to do it, the guidance of "make the case for how your program will aid economic growth" was unsettlingly vague.

13. Prime Minister Mosisili took the unusual step of inviting the team to meet with him in his offices. Flanked by the Deputy Prime Minister and Ministers of Foreign Affairs and Finance, the PM welcomed the opportunity presented by the MCA and spoke in general terms about investing in infrastructure, health, education and agriculture. He noted how "demeaning" it is to be forced to go to the international community for charity to feed his people, and thanked the U.S. for the chance to break the chains of dependency.

14. At the reception for the team at the Ambassador's residence, Minister of Finance Thahane told the Ambassador that he planned to have a proposal ready for the MCC by late August or early September. That would give the GOL time to hold the necessary consultations with the business, academic and NGO communities to produce a well conceived plan.

15. COMMENT: The GOL will have two primary challenges in putting together a viable proposal for the MCC. The first will be winnowing down all of the country's competing priorities into two or three key areas. Thahane will have his hands full dissuading his colleagues from setting forth a shopping list of pet projects, and the Prime Minister may have to step in at the end. The second will be to run a credible consultation process. The academic community in particular was inclined to simply sit back and wait for the government to come to them (or for the Embassy to force the government into a specific model of consultation). On a more encouraging note, however, the NGO representatives asked to continue using an embassy meeting room so that they could organize themselves on how they would interact with the government. If nothing else, the MCC model may force a bit more initiative into the local psychology. END COMMENT.
